🌍 Market Overview — Thursday, May 28th, 2026

📈 U.S. Futures Ease Lower as Markets Balance Inflation Data and Iran Tensions

U.S. stock futures are slightly lower Thursday morning as investors digest fresh inflation data, renewed military exchanges between the U.S. and Iran, and continued strength in AI-driven markets.

- Dow futures: -0.2%
- S&P 500 futures: slightly negative
- Nasdaq futures: -0.1%

Despite today's softer tone, the S&P 500 remains on track for its 9th straight weekly gain, fueled largely by AI enthusiasm and resilient earnings.

🌍 Fresh Gulf strikes keep markets cautious

Renewed military activity in the Gulf is pressuring sentiment again after both the U.S. and Iran exchanged strikes overnight.

According to reports:

- U.S. forces struck targets near Bandar Abbas
- Iran retaliated against a U.S. base in Kuwait
- Drone and missile activity increased across the region

The U.S. described its actions as "self defense" and stated that the ceasefire technically remains in place.

👉 Current market mood:

- Investors still hoping diplomacy prevails
- But confidence in a near-term deal remains shaky

🛢️ Oil prices rebound on renewed conflict fears

Oil prices moved higher again after the overnight escalation.

👉 Key concern remains:

- Persistent energy inflation
- Higher fuel costs globally
- Central banks potentially staying hawkish longer

Even after recent pullbacks, oil prices remain well above pre-war levels.

📊 PCE inflation data in focus today

Markets are now waiting for the latest PCE inflation report, one of the Federal Reserve's preferred inflation gauges.

Expectations:

- Headline PCE: 3.8% YoY
- Core PCE: 3.3% YoY

👉 Why it matters:
The market is trying to determine whether the Iran-driven oil shock is beginning to spread into broader inflation across the economy.

🤖 AI enthusiasm still overpowering macro fears

Despite geopolitical volatility, AI-related momentum continues supporting equities overall.

The market has largely continued rotating into:

- Semiconductors
- AI infrastructure
- Memory-chip leaders

👉 AI optimism remains the dominant bullish theme in markets.

⚠️ Traders continue buying the dip

Even with Iran headlines and rising yields, investors have mostly continued using pullbacks as buying opportunities.

The S&P 500 continues trading near record highs, helped by:

- Strong earnings
- AI spending boom
- Resilient consumer activity

💰 Notable stock movers

- HP: slightly lower after warning elevated memory-chip costs will pressure margins
- Marvell Technology: lower following earnings results
- Unusual Machines ↑
- AeroVironment ↑
  after reports the U.S. government may increase funding support for drone manufacturers

---

⚠️ Breakdown: what's driving the market now?

- PCE inflation data ahead
- Fresh Iran military escalation
- Oil prices elevated
- AI momentum still strong
- Bond yields stabilizing somewhat

👉 Market = cautiously bullish but macro-sensitive

👀 What traders are watching today

- PCE inflation report
- Oil movement after Gulf strikes
- Treasury yield reaction
- AI semiconductor strength
- Further Iran negotiation headlines
