📈 U.S. Futures Rebound as Markets Track Iran Conflict and Earnings

U.S. stock futures are moving higher Tuesday morning, bouncing back after the prior session's selloff as investors continue to monitor escalating tensions in the Middle East and a busy earnings slate.

- Dow futures: +131 pts (+0.3%)
- S&P 500 futures: +19 pts (+0.3%)
- Nasdaq futures: +112 pts (+0.4%)

The rebound follows a weaker session where markets dropped on renewed strikes between the U.S. and Iran and a spike in oil prices.

🌍 U.S.–Iran tensions intensify despite ceasefire

The geopolitical backdrop remains highly unstable, with both sides launching fresh attacks across the region.

- Explosions and fires reported on merchant ships
- U.S. escorting vessels through the Strait of Hormuz
- Drone and missile activity spreading into nearby regions

President Donald Trump suggested the conflict could last another three weeks, even while claiming the U.S. has already "won."

👉 Key takeaway:

- Ceasefire = fragile
- Conflict = still active
- Risk = elevated

🛢️ Oil stays elevated above $110

Oil remains a major driver as tensions continue:

- Brent crude: ~$113 (slightly easing but still elevated)

There are early signs that U.S. efforts to reopen the strait may be working, but supply disruptions are still significant.

👉 Impact:

- Inflation risk remains high
- Pressure on global growth continues

⚠️ Breakdown: what's driving the market now?

- Ongoing military conflict in Hormuz
- Oil still elevated despite slight pullback
- Markets reacting to headlines intraday

👉 Market = volatile, headline-driven

💰 Earnings in focus

- Advanced Micro Devices reporting after the close 🔥
    - Investors watching its ability to compete with Nvidia
- Palantir
