U.S. Futures Edge Higher as Iran Ceasefire Deal Boosts Sentiment

U.S. stock futures are modestly higher Friday morning after reports suggested the U.S. and Iran have reached a framework agreement to extend their ceasefire and ease restrictions around the Strait of Hormuz.

- Dow futures: +0.3%
- S&P 500 futures: +0.1%
- Nasdaq futures: +0.1%

The move comes after the S&P 500 and Nasdaq closed at fresh all-time highs for a second consecutive session.

Iran Deal Optimism Supports Markets

The biggest catalyst this morning is growing optimism that the Iran conflict may be moving toward a longer-term resolution.

Reports indicate:

- A proposed 60-day ceasefire extension has been drafted
- Restrictions on shipping through the Strait of Hormuz could be eased
- Final approval from President Donald Trump is still pending
- Iranian officials have not yet fully finalized the framework

👉 Market takeaway:

- Traders are treating this as a positive step toward de-escalation
- Energy supply concerns are easing
- Risk appetite remains supported

Oil Prices Fall Sharply

Oil is one of the biggest movers this morning.

- Brent crude: $91.21 (-1.6%)
- WTI crude: $87.70 (-1.4%)

Oil is now tracking for its largest weekly decline since April.

While prices remain above pre-conflict levels, the market is increasingly pricing in:

- Improved shipping access through Hormuz
- Reduced supply disruption risk
- Lower inflation pressure ahead

Inflation Remains a Key Focus

Yesterday's PCE inflation report came in slightly softer than expected.

Key takeaway:

- Inflation is still elevated
- But price pressures were not as severe as feared

One concern emerging from the data:

- Consumers appear to be pulling back spending to offset higher fuel costs

Fed Speakers on Deck

Markets will hear from several Fed officials today:

- Neel Kashkari
- Mary Daly
- Anna Paulson

Investors will be listening closely for:

- Rate outlook commentary
 - Inflation concerns
 - Impact of energy prices on policy

 AI Trade Remains Red Hot

The AI theme continues driving leadership in the market.

 Biggest Winner: Dell

- Dell Technologies: +34% premarket

Dell raised:

- Full-year revenue guidance
- Full-year profit guidance

Strong demand for AI servers continues fueling growth.

Sympathy Movers

- Super Micro Computer: higher
- Hewlett Packard Enterprise: higher

AI infrastructure spending remains one of the strongest themes in the market.

 Breakdown: What's Driving the Market?

Bullish

- ✓ Iran ceasefire framework
- ✓ Oil falling sharply
- ✓ Softer inflation data
- ✓ AI spending remains strong
- ✓ Record highs continue

Risks

- ⚠ Deal still needs final approval
 - ⚠ Oil remains above pre-war levels
 - ⚠ Consumer spending showing signs of slowing
 - ⚠ Fed still watching inflation closely
