 Market Overview — Wednesday, February 25, 2026 Futures Edge Higher Ahead of Nvidia Earnings

U.S. stock index futures ticked higher Wednesday as investors positioned cautiously ahead of quarterly earnings from several major companies, most notably artificial intelligence bellwether Nvidia. The results are widely expected to set the tone for the broader AI trade that has been driving global equity markets.

By early morning, Dow Jones Futures were up about 68 points (+0.1%), while S&P 500 futures gained 0.2% and Nasdaq 100 futures rose 0.2%.

Wall Street closed higher in the prior session as fears around AI disruption eased, helping risk sentiment stabilize. The S&P 500 climbed 0.8%, the Nasdaq Composite rose nearly 1.1%, and the Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 0.8%, continuing a modest rebound in technology shares.

 Nvidia in Focus — Market's Key Catalyst

Investor optimism earlier this week was helped by new AI partnerships across the industry, including Meta's multi-year chip deal with AMD and a wave of collaborations announced by Anthropic.

But the real test comes after the close, when Nvidia reports earnings. The chipmaker — now the world's most valuable company — is expected to once again post strong growth, with forecasts calling for:

- Profit growth around 62%
- Revenue growth near 68%

Because Nvidia has beaten estimates for 13 straight quarters, markets will be watching not just the beat — but how big it is.

Earnings Continue Across Tech

Beyond Nvidia, several major tech names are also reporting, including Salesforce and Snowflake.

Recent corporate updates have been mixed:

- HP slid after issuing a weak 2026 outlook tied to trade regulations and rising chip costs
- Workday fell after forecasting softer revenue as companies pull back spending

This reinforces a broader theme — investors are becoming more selective after the massive AI-driven rally.

Policy & Politics Still in the Background

Trade policy uncertainty remains a lingering factor after President Trump imposed temporary 10% global tariffs following a Supreme Court ruling that struck down earlier reciprocal levies.

During his State of the Union address, Trump defended his tariff strategy and highlighted ongoing negotiations with Iran, while recent polling shows continued voter concern about the economy and inflation.

 Commodities — Oil Near Seven-Month Highs

Oil prices remained elevated ahead of nuclear negotiations between the U.S. and Iran later this week, reflecting ongoing geopolitical risk.

- Brent crude: ~$70.92 (+0.5%)
- WTI crude: ~$65.93 (+0.5%)

Prices are hovering near their highest levels since early August as markets price in potential supply disruptions.
