Futures Slip as Oil Surge Weighs on Sentiment

U.S. stock futures edged lower Friday morning as escalating tensions in the Middle East and a sharp surge in oil prices pressured sentiment ahead of the closely watched U.S. jobs report.

As of early trading:

- Dow futures: -105 points (-0.2%)
- S&P 500 futures: -0.3%
- Nasdaq 100 futures: -0.4%

The cautious tone follows a difficult session Thursday. The Dow Jones Industrial Average dropped nearly 785 points (-1.6%), putting the index on pace for its worst week since October, while the S&P 500 fell 0.6% and the Nasdaq slipped 0.3%.

 Oil Spike Drives Market Anxiety

Energy markets remain the dominant driver of risk sentiment this week.

- Brent crude: ~$87.43 (+2.7%)
- WTI crude: ~$84.26 (+4%)

Since the start of the U.S.-Israel campaign against Iran, WTI has surged roughly 21% and Brent nearly 18%, fueling fears of supply disruptions from the Middle East.

The core concern is the Strait of Hormuz, a narrow shipping lane between Iran and Oman that handles about 20% of global oil supply. Any sustained disruption could dramatically tighten global energy markets.

Higher oil prices are already affecting consumers. U.S. gasoline prices have jumped 27 cents to about $3.25 per gallon, adding pressure to inflation and complicating the Federal Reserve's policy outlook.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth warned that U.S. firepower in the region could "surge dramatically," while Israel announced a broad wave of strikes on infrastructure targets in Tehran.

President Donald Trump also indicated the U.S. may remain involved in Iran's political transition after airstrikes killed Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei.

 Jobs Report in Focus

Markets now turn to the February U.S. nonfarm payrolls report, due later Friday.

Economists expect:

- +58,000 jobs added
- Unemployment rate around 4.3%

The data will play a major role in shaping expectations for Federal Reserve interest rate cuts later this year.

A strong labor market could reinforce the case for higher rates for longer, particularly if rising oil prices push inflation pressures higher again.

AI Spending Lifts Marvell

On the corporate front, Marvell Technology raised its full-year revenue outlook, benefiting from continued heavy spending on AI infrastructure.

Major tech companies including Amazon and Microsoft are investing billions into building the data centers required to power artificial intelligence.

Marvell's networking and data-transfer chips — critical to connecting large-scale AI systems — have become key beneficiaries of that investment cycle.

Retail Earnings Mixed

Retail updates also reflected mixed consumer dynamics:

- Gap disappointed investors with cautious fiscal 2026 guidance, citing tariff pressures.
 - Costco reported stronger Q2 revenue and profit, with membership fee revenue rising 13.6% year-over-year to $1.36B.
