 Futures Dip as Oil Stays Elevated and Fed Looms

U.S. stock futures moved lower Tuesday as investors weighed rising geopolitical tensions and persistent oil strength ahead of a crucial week for global central bank decisions.

Early market action:

- Dow futures: -163 points (-0.4%)
- S&P 500 futures: -0.4%
- Nasdaq 100 futures: -0.5%

Markets had gained in the prior session on hopes of global cooperation to reopen the Strait of Hormuz, but that optimism faded after several U.S. allies declined to assist.

 Oil Climbs Again on Fresh Attacks

Oil prices continued to push higher as tensions escalated near key shipping routes.

- Brent crude: holding above ~$100
- WTI crude: also elevated near key levels

A tanker was reportedly struck near the UAE, while a drone attack sparked a fire at an oil facility—adding to fears of prolonged disruption.

Shipping through the Strait of Hormuz remains severely constrained due to:

- Safety concerns for crews
- Lack of insurance coverage
- Iran's threats to block certain vessels

Despite efforts by the International Energy Agency to release record oil reserves, supply fears persist.

Gold Edges Higher Ahead of Central Bank Decisions

Gold prices ticked up as investors balanced safe-haven demand with inflation concerns.

- Gold continues trading in a $5,000–$5,200 range

While geopolitical tensions support gold, rising oil prices are increasing inflation expectations, which could lead to higher interest rates and a stronger U.S. dollar, limiting further upside.

Central Banks in Focus This Week

This week features a global wave of interest rate decisions, headlined by the Federal Reserve on Wednesday.

Other major central banks meeting:

- Bank of Canada
- Bank of Japan
- Bank of England
- European Central Bank
- Swiss National Bank

The Fed is widely expected to hold rates steady, but markets will be watching closely for guidance as policymakers balance:

- Rising inflation risks from oil
- Signs of a weakening labor market

Australia Hikes Rates on Energy Concerns

The Reserve Bank of Australia raised interest rates by 25 basis points to 4.1%, citing renewed inflation risks tied to energy prices.

The decision highlights how global central banks are beginning to react to the inflationary impact of the Middle East conflict.

Nvidia Doubles Down on AI Outlook

At its developer conference, Nvidia ($NVDA) CEO Jensen Huang projected the company could generate $1 trillion in AI chip sales by 2027, doubling prior expectations.

A major focus is AI inference, where models perform real-time tasks — a rapidly growing segment of the AI market.

Nvidia also showcased new high-performance systems combining its latest chips with technology from Groq, claiming massive speed improvements over previous generations.
