Markets Turn Cautious as Iran Tensions Flare Again Ahead of Jobs Report

Markets are turning more cautious Friday morning after renewed clashes between U.S. and Iranian forces near the Strait of Hormuz pressured global equities and briefly sent oil prices sharply higher.

- S&P 500 futures: +0.3%
- Futures recovering slightly ahead of the U.S. jobs report

Despite the early rebound in futures, overall sentiment remains fragile as investors weigh geopolitical risk, a key economic report, and volatile earnings reactions across the tech sector.

Iran tensions flare again near Hormuz

Fresh military clashes near the Strait of Hormuz rattled markets overnight, reviving fears that the conflict could escalate again despite recent ceasefire optimism.

The U.S. military reportedly intercepted attacks targeting warships near the region, while President Donald Trump maintained that the ceasefire with Iran remains intact.

Key takeaway:

- Markets still not pricing in worst-case escalation
 - Geopolitical risk remains elevated
 - Traders becoming more cautious near highs

Oil gives back gains after early spike

Oil initially surged overnight before reversing lower:

- Brent crude briefly jumped +3%
- Later fell back below $100

Even with the pullback, crude remains highly sensitive to headlines surrounding the Strait of Hormuz and Middle East tensions.

Bigger picture:

- Markets still betting diplomacy eventually wins out
 - But volatility remains elevated

Trump-Xi summit in focus

Attention is also turning toward next week's planned summit between President Donald Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping in Beijing.

The meeting is expected to focus heavily on:

- Iran conflict
- Trade tensions
- Global economic coordination

👉 Markets watching closely for any signs of broader geopolitical stabilization

Global markets pull back

Risk sentiment weakened globally overnight:

- Japan's Nikkei closed lower
- European markets declined sharply
- Wall Street pulled back from record highs

The renewed Middle East tension reduced appetite for risk assets after several weeks of strong upside momentum.

NFP jobs report in focus today

Today's U.S. jobs report is the major catalyst markets are waiting for.

Expectations:

- Payrolls: +50K
- Unemployment rate: 4.3%

👉 Why it matters:

The Fed has already shifted more hawkish due to rising energy prices, meaning stronger labor data could reinforce higher-rate expectations.

💻 Software earnings trigger sharp moves

Software earnings created major volatility premarket:

📈 Winners

- Akamai: +30% after announcing a major AI cloud deal
- Bill Holdings: +12% after strong earnings

📉 Losers

- HubSpot: sharply lower
- Trade Desk: sharply lower
- Cloudflare: sharply lower

👉 Software sector volatility remains elevated

⚠️ Breakdown: what's driving the market now?

- Renewed Iran tensions
- Oil volatility
- NFP jobs report today
- Big moves in software earnings

👉 Market = cautious but still resilient

👁️ What traders are watching today

- U.S. jobs report (NFP)
 - Any escalation near Hormuz
 - Oil price reaction
 - Follow-through in software names
 - Trump/Xi summit headlines
