U.S. Futures Slip After Hot Producer Inflation Data

U.S. stock futures are mixed Wednesday morning after another hotter-than-expected inflation report reinforced concerns that rising energy costs are continuing to pressure prices across the economy.

- Dow futures: -240 pts (-0.5%)
- S&P 500 futures: -0.1%
- Nasdaq futures: +0.3%

Markets are now balancing sticky inflation, rising bond yields, ongoing Iran tensions, and a major upcoming summit between President Donald Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Producer inflation adds to market pressure

Fresh producer price data followed yesterday's hot CPI report, keeping inflation concerns elevated.

Markets are increasingly worried that the prolonged energy shock tied to the Iran conflict and the shutdown of the Strait of Hormuz is feeding broader inflation pressures.

👉 Result:

- Fed rate-cut expectations fading
- Treasury yields rising
- Pressure building on equities

The 10-year Treasury yield climbed to its highest level since mid-2025, while traders are now pricing in more Fed tightening risk over the next year.

Iran stalemate continues

Diplomatic efforts between Washington and Tehran appear increasingly stuck.

President Donald Trump rejected Iran's latest response to a U.S. peace proposal earlier this week, while reports continue to circulate that the White House may consider renewed military action.

At the same time, Iran has shown little willingness to soften its position.

👉 Key issue:

- Strait of Hormuz remains heavily disrupted
 - Oil supply concerns remain elevated
 - Markets growing nervous peace may still be far away

Oil remains elevated despite slight pullback

Oil prices eased slightly Wednesday morning, but remain far above pre-war levels:

- Brent crude: ~$106

The prolonged disruption in the Strait of Hormuz continues to fuel inflation fears and broader concerns around global growth.

Trump-Xi summit in focus

Attention is shifting toward President Trump's upcoming meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Topics expected to dominate discussions include:

- Trade
- Taiwan
- Iran conflict
- Global economic stability

Some investors hope China could help support a future peace framework with Iran due to its role as a major importer of Iranian oil.

AI momentum still supporting markets

Despite macro pressure, AI-related enthusiasm remains one of the strongest bullish forces in the market.

Chip stocks recently surged on renewed optimism surrounding AI infrastructure spending, though some cooling has started to appear after the recent rally.

💰 Earnings spotlight: Cisco after the bell

- Cisco Systems: reports earnings after the close

Investors will watch closely for commentary around:

- AI demand
- Chip costs
- Enterprise spending

The company previously warned about rising memory chip prices tied to AI infrastructure demand.

🏛️ Kevin Warsh expected to become next Fed Chair

The Senate is expected to confirm Kevin Warsh as the next Fed Chair.

Warsh is expected to replace Jerome Powell later this week, with markets watching closely for any shift in future Fed policy direction.

👉 Current expectation:
Fed likely stays cautious until inflation pressures ease more clearly.

👁️ What traders are watching today

- Producer inflation reaction
 - Treasury yield movement
 - Trump-Xi summit developments
 - Cisco earnings after close
 - Continued Iran headlines
