Relief Bounce, But AI Spending Gets Questioned

Markets are attempting a rebound after yesterday's ugly selloff.

- Dow Futures: +0.8%
- S&P 500 Futures: +0.8%
- Nasdaq Futures: +1.2% (tech leading recovery)

Yesterday:

- S&P -1.6%
 - Nasdaq -2.0%
 - Dow -1.9% (worst day of 2026)

Inflation Round 2: PPI Up Next

After yesterday's hotter CPI report, markets now shift to Producer Price Index (PPI).

What traders want to know:

- Are energy prices bleeding deeper into the economy?
- Does this increase chances of higher rates?

If PPI comes in hot:

→ yields likely move up again

→ tech could stay pressured

If cooler:

→ rebound may continue

Middle East: Talks Continue Despite Strikes

Markets got some relief after reports suggested the U.S. and Iran are still negotiating.

Developments:

- Overnight talks reportedly continued
- Reports mention discussions around:
 - unfreezing Iranian funds
 - preliminary peace framework
- Oil gave back earlier gains

Still unresolved:

- Strait of Hormuz remains the market's pressure point
- New military exchanges happened overnight

Oil eased but remains elevated.

AI Trade Faces Another Reality Check

Big story this morning:

● Oracle down 9%+

Why:

- Strong earnings
- BUT forecasted massive AI spending
- Plans up to $95B capex
- Additional $40B financing

Market reaction:

Investors are asking whether AI demand stays strong enough to justify this spending race.

Also adding pressure:

- Reports that OpenAI may lower pricing to compete harder.
