 U.S. Market Overview — Futures Slip, Fed Cut Bets Rise, Trump Nears Fed Chair Pick & Oil Climbs

Futures Pull Back After Strong Holiday Week

U.S. stock futures edged lower Monday as traders reassessed the rapid surge in rate-cut expectations:

- S&P 500 Futures: -42 pts (-0.6%)
- Nasdaq 100 Futures: -182 pts (-0.7%)
- Dow Futures: -220 pts (-0.5%)

Despite today's weakness, all three major indices gained over 3% during the shortened Thanksgiving week.

- S&P 500 & Dow: Closed positive for November
 - Nasdaq: Fell -1.51%, pressured by concerns over stretched tech valuations and debt-heavy AI spending

Rate-Cut Hopes Surge Into December Meeting

Bets on a 25 bps Fed cut at the Dec. 9-10 meeting have jumped dramatically:

- Cut Probability: ~88%, up from the mid-40% range just over a week ago

This shift has been driven by:

- Dovish Fed commentary
- Limited fresh data due to the recent federal government shutdown
- Cooling inflation trends

Markets now enter a week loaded with U.S. data — manufacturing, services, consumer sentiment, and private payrolls — along with focus on big-box retailers after a blockbuster Black Friday online spending surge.

Trump Fed Chair Decision Looms

Markets are also watching who President Donald Trump selects as the next Federal Reserve Chair.

Shortlist reportedly includes:

- Kevin Hassett (WH economic adviser) — frontrunner
- Kevin Warsh (former Fed Governor)
- Christopher Waller (current Fed Governor)

Hassett has downplayed the speculation, saying only he'd be "happy to serve."

A Trump-aligned pick could drive:

- More aggressive rate cuts
- A more dovish policy shift
- Support for equities, especially growth and retail names

Jerome Powell speaks later today, though he is unlikely to say anything market-moving due to the Fed's blackout period before the December meeting.

Oil Rises as OPEC+ Holds Production Steady

Oil climbed more than 1% early Monday:

- Brent: $63.11 (+1.1%)
- WTI: $59.26 (+1.2%)

Key drivers:

- OPEC+ reaffirmed no production increases through Q1
- Maintaining voluntary cuts of ~3.24M barrels/day
- Ongoing concerns about uneven demand in 2025
- Additional support from geopolitical disruptions

Over the weekend, multiple attacks on Russian energy infrastructure boosted supply concerns:

- The Caspian Pipeline Consortium halted loadings after a naval drone strike damaged a mooring point at the Novorossiysk terminal.
