Markets Start the Week Higher as Rate Hike Fears Ease

Futures Snapshot

Stocks are kicking off the week with modest gains as investors return from the holiday weekend, encouraged by last week's softer jobs data.

- Dow Futures: -0.2%
- S&P 500 Futures: +0.3%
- Nasdaq 100 Futures: +1.1%

Tech is leading the market higher after a rough couple of weeks for semiconductor stocks.

AI & Chip Stocks Try to Bounce

After recent selling, AI and semiconductor stocks are attempting a rebound.

What's driving the move?

-  The Philadelphia Semiconductor Index is down roughly 12% over the past two weeks.
 -  Investors continue debating whether massive AI spending will eventually generate enough profits to justify current valuations.
 -  Today's strength suggests buyers are stepping back into beaten-down

Fed Watch

Last week's weaker-than-expected jobs report reduced concerns that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates in the near term.

This Week's Focus:

- 📝 Fed Meeting Minutes (Wednesday) — Investors will look for clues on future rate decisions.
 - 👤 Fed Chair Kevin Warsh may also announce members of new task forces reviewing the Fed's communication and policy framework.

Earnings Season Begins

Second-quarter earnings start ramping up this week.

Companies to Watch:

- 📊 LEVI – Levi Strauss
- 🥤 PEP – PepsiCo
- ✈️ DAL – Delta Air Lines

These reports will provide an early read on consumer spending and corporate demand.

Oil Market Update

Oil Prices

Energy prices are drifting slightly lower as improving supply outweighs geopolitical concerns.

- Brent Crude: $72.00/barrel (-0.2%)
- WTI Crude: $68.62/barrel (-0.1%)

Oil has now returned to around pre-war price levels, a significant improvement from the $110+ per barrel highs seen during the height of the conflict.

What to Watch This Week

-  Federal Reserve meeting minutes (Wednesday)
 -  Start of Q2 earnings season
 -  Whether AI and semiconductor stocks can extend today's rebound
 -  Oil prices after the OPEC+ production increase
 -  Treasury yields and interest rate expectations
